##An introduction to an informative and factual blog post titled "What Is Phoenix Psychotherapy?" ## Used for centuries as a stand-alone or complementary treatment for many mental health disorders by healers from many cultures, psychology is now being formally studied through scientific methods. Psychotherapy is one example of this—psychologists are medical doctors who have specialized training in psychotherapy techniques. The practice of psychotherapy includes assisting patients in gaining insights, inspiration and answers to life's problems. Psychotherapy is not just about treating mental illness; it is also about enhancing well-being and addressing life crises such as job loss or divorce. Psychotherapy can help people understand and resolve thoughts, emotions and behaviors to make them more positive and proactive. Psychotherapy is an active, collaborative process between the therapist and the patient. Psychotherapy is a valid form of treatment for mental health disorders such as: Mental Health Disorders:

Acute Stress Disorder (ASD) After experiencing a traumatic event, many people develop symptoms similar to those seen in posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD). However, these symptoms do not last for more than four weeks. Adjustment Disorder (AD) Adjustment disorder is a reaction to an identifiable stressor. People with adjustment disorder generally experience intense negative emotions, especially anxiety and depression. Anorexia Nervosa The official diagnostic criteria for anorexia nervosa are: weight loss; undue influence of body weight or shape on self-evaluation; fear of gaining weight; an intense desire to be thin; and disturbances in the way one's body fat or shape is experienced, undue influence of body size or shape on the way one thinks and feels about oneself. Also called anorexia. Anxiety Disorder Not otherwise specified (NOS) The main symptoms of an anxiety disorder are intense fear and helplessness that result in avoidance behavior. These disorders are characterized by feelings of intense distress and apprehension, often triggered by seemingly ordinary events. Atypical Depression Atypical depression is a mood disorder involving recurrent depressive episodes that do not follow typical patterns or occur only in response to stressors. Also called irregular depression. Bipolar Disorder Bipolar disorder is a brain disorder marked by periods of intense emotion, changes in energy levels, abnormal thinking, and altered sleep cycles. It is marked by alternating periods of mania—overactivity, impulsiveness, irritability—and depression. Also called manic-depressive illness. Body Dysmorphic Disorder (BDD) Body dysmorphic disorder causes a person to fixate on a nonexistent or slight flaw in his or her physical features. A person with this disorder will spend most of the day thinking about the perceived defect. The flaw may be insignificant—even invisible to others. Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder (OCD) Obsessive-compulsive disorder is a common and chronic anxiety-related illness that causes victims to obsess over an intrusive, unwanted thought, feeling, image or impulse and engage in compulsive behavior to relieve the obsessive thought. Symptoms include obsessive thoughts, compulsive actions and associated feelings.
