Among the Latin American countries, Costa Rica happens to be the longest-standing democracy and its socio-economic scenario is stable. The countries around it plagued by great political uncertainty and potential social unrest are turning to Costa Rica for continued stability in the country. Costa Rica's real estate market is booming and presents a viable investment opportunity.

As expected during the pandemic, home sales have slumped here. However, from the second half of 2021 to the present, beach areas such as Guanacaste, Jaco, and Dominical, as well as frontier towns such as Atenas, Grecia, Prusical, and San Ramon in the Central Valley, are experiencing real estate booms, all of which are big. We are witnessing a massive influx of real estate foreign investors including retirees. In southern Costa Rica, investment in Land has become an attractive option.

Why is investment in Real Estate very lucrative?

Due to the scarcity of land, the price of real estate, especially residential and commercial land, is also rising. Traditionally, people love to invest in the real estate and properties. This is because selling a property after a long holding period usually results in a significant price increase. Real estate has always been a low-risk, high-return and reliable investment. This sector remains a favorite despite market volatility and turbulence from coronavirus and bank rate hikes. Growing interest from HNWI's (High Net worth Individuals) and foreign investors are also making real estate investments more attractive. Find the best houses for sale in Uvita Costa Rica!

Investment in Land Vs Investment in Apartment

In the long run, the land will be valued more than an apartment. The main reason for this is the limited availability of land and the inability to increase its supply according to market needs and demands. Land asset values do not decrease due to age deterioration, but asset values increase.
