Title: Ultimate Guide To All the Information About Block Printed Kurtas - The Jaipur Loom Description: Block Print Kurtas Are Very Popular Among The Womens. An Detailed Guide To All The Information You Want On Block Printed Kurtas And Know The Types Of Block Prints And How They Are Practiced In Different Regions. - The Jaipur Loom

Ultimate Guide To All the Information You Want On Block Printed Kurtas And Types of Block Prints

One piece of clothing that needs no introduction is the Kurta. It is an everlasting trend that crosses national boundaries. Kurtas are not limited to any nation, even though they are primarily associated with India. Generally, a kurta is a long top that ends at the knee.

Kurtas are a single piece of clothing that has evolved. Throughout the ages, this particular ensemble has seen a transformation. It can include printed kurtas printed in block or plain kurtas.

Historical Background

Block printed kurtas were popular in the areas of India, Pakistan, Nepal, Bangladesh, and, to a lesser extent, Sri Lanka. Images from the past and other archives show both men and women dressed in block printed kurtas at that period.

The first kurtas were meant for males. According to historical accounts and archives, poets and scholars in ancient times liked donning kurtas. But over time, kurtas also became a staple piece of clothing for ladies, and they are still among the most sought-after outfits for women today.

Block Printed Kurtas

Kurtas are available in several styles. The block printed kurtas are the most popular of all of them. Block printed kurtas are more popular among women. Kurtas with hand block prints are one such item that dazzles fashionistas. Women have long been fascinated by block printed kurtas. Whatever their place of origin or cultural background, Whether they are from the United States, the United Kingdom, Italy, or France, ladies have a strong preference for block printed kurtas everywhere they go.

Understand the Patterns of Indian Hand Block Prints.

Learn more about the context of the Indian handblock prints that you love.

What is block printing?

The process of printing on carefully carved wooden blocks is known as block printing. Various types of block printing are used on paper or cloth to accentuate the ethnic appeal of the goods that are made. Wooden blocks are used by craftspeople to print lovely patterns on fabric. Hand-block printed kurtas are popular throughout the globe due to their timeless beauty. There is nothing like the artistic appeal of hand printing.

Different Types Of Block Printed Kurtas

Ajrak

Ajrak is among the most well-known types of block printing. Natural colours derived from vegetables are the foundation of Ajrakh block printing. The printed fabric's background is indigo and crimson red, giving it a unique appearance. This type of block printing is widely used in Pakistan's Sindh, Gujarat, Kutch, and Rajasthan. Buy ethnic suits for women online, and look elegant and beautiful with block printed kurtas.

The most common pattern in Ajrak blocks is dots between two lines. In almost every design, the radius of these dots is the same. These dots were initially carved out by hand; later, brass nails were used. This is an essential factor in determining the skill level of the craftsman.

Akola

The Rajasthani city of Udaipur is the centre for this "dabu" block printing type. This ancient art form's fundamental basis is the "Dabu" art, which translates as the press.

Both conventional objects and natural shapes inspire the designs used in Akola block printing.

Bagh

The Bagh region of Madhya Pradesh is the origin of the traditional block print known as Bagh. Only natural colours, primarily red and black, were used to dye this hand-block printed fabric. The Bagh block print is an excellent option if you want to add something ethnic to your wardrobe to boost the attractiveness of your outfits. The block printed kurtas look great with this technique. The block printed is also now used in short kurtis; the kurtis with block prints look elegant and royal. Are you confused about where to buy Indian short kurti? The Jaipur Loom has a great collection of short kurtis; shop online now!

Bagru

Natural colours are used in a style of hand block printing called "Bagru print" by the "Chippas" of Bagru, India, who have been practising cloth printing for over a century. All around the world, these Bagru prints are well recognized. Bagru prints use a unique printing technique, which is in contrast to ordinary prints. In the traditional printing process, wooden blocks are used. Using a carved block in the selected colour, the desired pattern is first etched on a wooden block before repeated on the cloth.

Batik

The Indonesian technique known as batik involves covering the entire fabric with wax-resist colouring. This approach originated on the Indonesian island of Java. Batik is made in two ways: either using a copper stamp known as a cap to print the resist or with a spouted tool called a canting to draw dots and lines on the resist. Hand-block printed salwar suits look very elegant and beautiful. Buy a designer suit set online from The Jaipur Loom.

Kalamkari

The unique hand-painted textile known as kalamkari is grown in Andhra Pradesh, India. This distinctive Indian block print fabric is available in two variants, Machilipatnam and Srikalahasti, and is created using twenty-three different methods. Kalamkari was once known as Pattachitra, an art form that is still practised in several parts of India and Nepal, as well as in the neighbouring state of Odisha. "Pattachitra" is made up of the terms "patta," which means "cloth," and "chitra," which means "image."

Kutch

To print an identical pattern on fabric, Kutch black-printed cloth usually involves using many printing techniques, including the well-known Ajrakh and Batik hand block prints. Developed about 400 years ago in Kutch, this special technique for block printing has gained a loyal following.

Sanganeri

Sanganer, a village near Jaipur, Rajasthan's southern area, is the birthplace of the "Sanganeri" hand-block printing method. This kind of textile printing, which dates back more than five centuries, continues to be valued by weavers and artisans worldwide. The primary colours used in block printing are red and yellow, and natural phenomena usually inspire the patterns and designs. Additionally, organic colours are used in Sanganeri block printing. The sanganeri block printed kurtas are very famous in the country.